Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

A cooling trend is expected for the first half of the week as an upper level trough drives cooler air south. With the trough off the coast during the first part of the week, the marine layer will deepen, allowing moist coastal air to penetrate farther inland. Another round of storms will be possible as this low moves through with storms moving very slowly, likely beginning on Friday. Confidence remains low on the timing of the upper low despite the agreement in the models, so depending on the track of the low, thunderstorm chances may linger through Friday night into Saturday.

Medford Weather:

A short wave supporting convection will slowly move through the region, clearing out to the northeast Monday morning. Drier southwest flow aloft will develop in its wake, but it will still be moist and unstable enough for isolated to scattered thunderstorms from the Cascades east and Siskiyou's south. Another shortwave will approach the California coast Tuesday, bringing the flow aloft back to southerly, which will allow another surge of monsoonal moisture into the area, possibly bringing mostly evening thunderstorms. The shortwave will finally move inland on Wednesday and most areas will dry out, though with a slight chance of thunderstorms in portions of eastern Modoc and Lake Counties. Dry weather will continue into Thursday, and then another upper low off the California coast will move in late in the week into the weekend, bringing another round of showers and thunderstorms, especially from the Cascades eastward.

Reno Weather:

Decreasing moisture is expected to keep thunderstorms isolated this afternoon and evening, waning to areas well north of Interstate 80 Tuesday. Thunderstorm chances return on Friday as low pressure approaches the Sierra and western Nevada. Afternoon temperatures will remain around average this week.

San Francisco Weather:

A slight cooling trend is forecast to continue through Tuesday as onshore flow and the marine influence increases. Modest warming is then forecast for Wednesday and Thursday. Aside from patchy coastal drizzle and fog during the overnight and early morning hours, dry weather conditions are expected to persist through the forecast period.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Look for cooler temperatures for the next few days for interior Northern California. Monday looks to be dry with southwest flow pushing any activity east of the Sierra Crest. There will be a slight chance of mainly mountain thunderstorms on Tuesday and Friday as a weak low pressure trough brushes the northern portion of the area.

Hanford Weather:

A gradual cooling trend will take place over central California through the week with dry conditions. Marine cooled air pushed through the Delta and into the San Joaquin Valley will make triple digits subside for the next several days. Onshore flow and weak disturbances will provide high clouds from time to time and much cooler temperatures. The closed low will move onshore on Friday and we have a slight chance of thunderstorms near the Sierra Crest as the low moves across northern California.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Upper level low pressure off the coast will bring near normal temperatures and night through morning low clouds and fog to some areas west of the mountains this week. A ridge of high pressure over the four corners region will build slightly through mid week resulting in a slight warming trend. Cooling is expected for late in the week and next weekend as the upper low off the coast moves east.

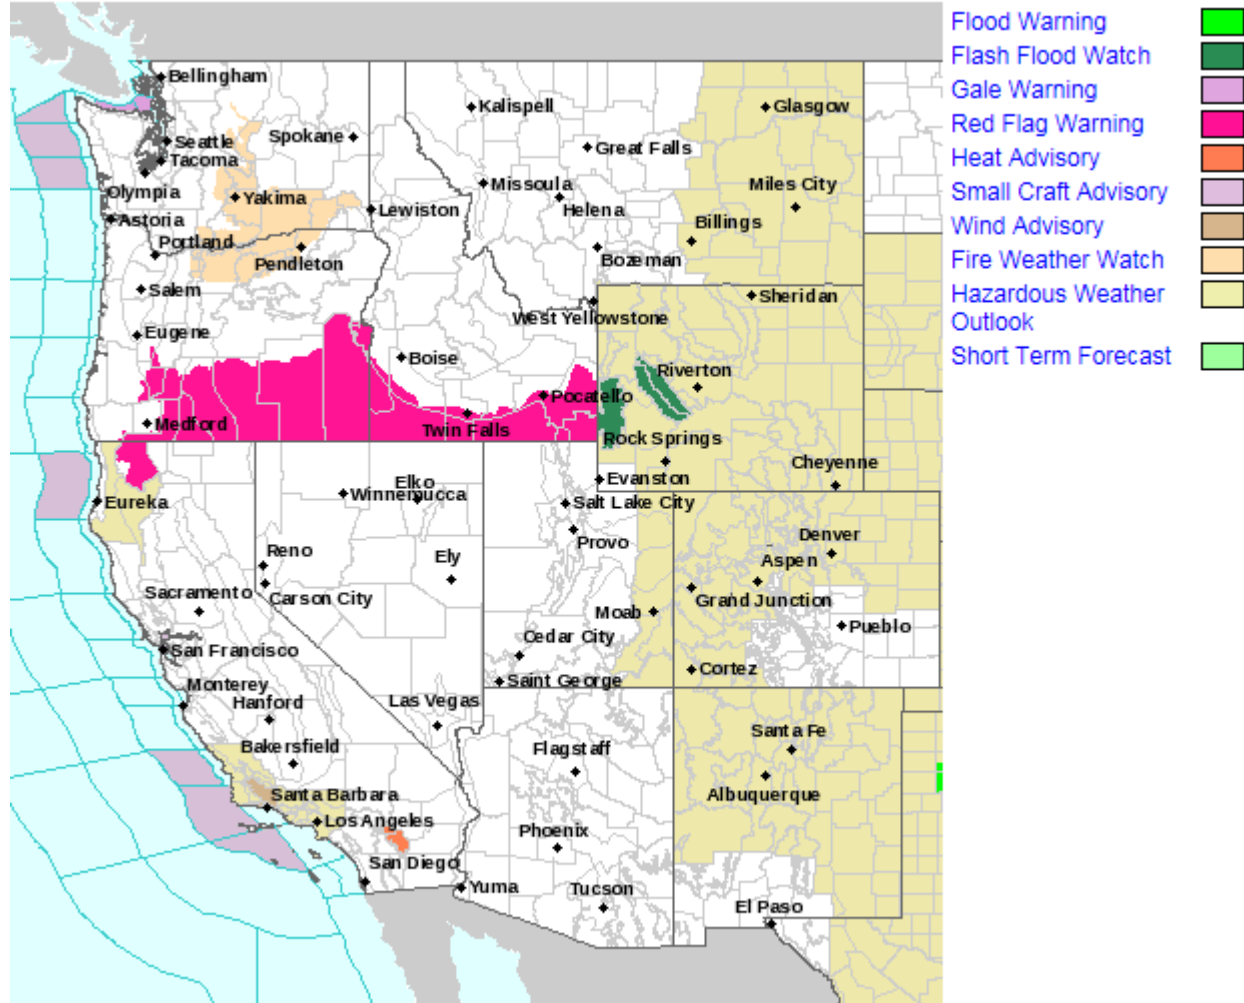

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Building high pressure will result in a slight inland warming trend through Wednesday. For coastal areas, night and morning low clouds and patchy fog will spread locally into the valleys at times with weak onshore lower level flow. Thursday through Saturday, weak low pressure system will move inland through northern and central California bringing a slow inland cooling trend and slightly deeper marine layer.

Southeast California Weather:

Dry and stable conditions are expected over much of the region today. Some weak instability and residual moisture remains over the Sierra for a slight chance of afternoon thunderstorms, but by Tuesday and Wednesday the entire forecast area is expected to remain dry. Thunderstorms chances will creep back into mainly Arizona by the end of the week.
